THE KEELY MOTOR.

The motive principles of this new power, about which so much has been said, is now represented to be the expansive power of carbonic acid. This important compound, under a pressure of thirty-six atmospheres, at the temperature of 32 degrees Fahrenheit, and when the pressure which retains it in the liquid state is removed the rapidity of the evaporation and the enormous expansion of the vapor are such as to produce a degree of cold under which solidifies, forming a white concrete substance, possessed of very extraordinary properties. Prof. Faraday was the first who liqued carbonic acid, but it was first treated as a solid by W. Thilorier. At common temperature and pressures water absorbs its own volume of carbonic acid; under a pressure of two atmospheres it dissolves twice its volume, and so on. An intelligent correspondent of the Savannah News, who claims to have made numerous and expensive experiments with it, has no doubt of its immense power as a mechanical agent, in proof of which he adduces the following progressive augmentation of its expansive properties by increased temperatures.

At 5 degrees Fahrenheit the pressure in pounds per square inch is 372.
At 10 degrees Fahrenheit the pressure in
pounds per square inch is 403.
At 20 degrees Fahrenheit the pressure in
pounds per square inch is 460.
At 30 degrees Fahrenheit the pressure in
pounds per square inch is 560.
At 40 degrees Fahrenheit the pressure in
pounds per square inch is 697.
At 45 degrees Fahrenheit the pressure in
pounds per square inch is 1,080.

Heretofore the great scientific difficulty has been to know how to utilize this wonderfully expansive power—to put the harness on it, so to speak, and to work it, as Prof. Morse has harnessed electricity and compelled it to carry messages. Now, Mr. Keely claims, this difficulty has at length been conquered, and people who profess to have patiently examined his plans, and listened to the description of his generator, multiplier, receiver, pipes, etc., are convinced he will succeed. The advantages claimed for it over steam and the steam engine are many, not the least of which are economy, safety and ease of application. If applied to navigation the propelling power, it is said, would cost more than five dollars to run a steamer from Savannah to New York; and as the new machinery will not take up one-fourth part of the weight and room of a boiler, engine and fuel, of equal power, another advantage would be additional carrying capacity and space for freight.

OLD TIME WASHING DAYS.—Washing day, now a bugbear in every household, does not seem to have been much of an institution in the days of our great-grandmothers. Indeed, we are forced to the conclusion, mortifying as it is, that they were not very cleanly in their personal habits. Linen and cotton, materials that could be washed, were not popular in England two centuries and a half ago. Velvets, taffeta and rich silks were in the middle ages often worn by the wealthy without any underclothing whatever, while the domestics and people of the lower order wore coarse woolen, and without underclothing. The possession of a linen shirt, even with the highest nobles, was a matter of note, and it was but few warlike generations that were not popular in England two centuries and a half ago.

PERILS OF LONDON.—Nor is it only in respect to the filthy condition of their streets that the people of London feel aggrieved. The destruction of human life by carts and omnibuses is even greater than in New York. At least so it appears, judging from a letter in the Times, in which the writer says:

"A record of the fatal accidents which have occurred in the streets of London during the last ten years would be startling as well as impressive. 'Death and danger dog' our heels at every step. A lady steps on the greasy pavement, falls, and is taken up dead, with the broken end of her parasol through her heart; a gentleman, in crossing a street, is struck down by the pole of an omnibus, which enters his mouth, inflicting a fatal injury, and he dies in agony a few days afterwards; a piece of machinery, employed in the construction of a bridge across the Thames, breaks and kills a man who happens to be passing at the moment; and a telegraph wire snaps asunder and kills a man while sitting on the top of an omnibus. The destruction of human life by cabs and carts is, as you have recently stated, so frequent that even all our railways do not yield more victims than the streets of this metropolis. There is no doubt that, by a judicious system of police regulations strictly enforced, the number of accidents from this cause might be greatly lessened, and it is to be hoped, that since a venerable judge, the coroner, and the Times have directed public attention to the subject, the reckless indifference of drivers may at last be duly restrained."—
